To Whom It May Concern:

The recent decisions have been fair, though I believe that it shouldn't have started in the first place.

I have seen Microsoft improve the quality of the operation System and offering what the consumer wants.

This problem with other companies like Sun and other companies should try and make better software.

So what if Microsoft makes Internet Explorer as part of the operation System, at least they are offering it in the package and not making the user having to search for a downloadable copy of it. Like Netscape's version 6 browser which was outright Pathetic and slow, but Microsoft produced Internet explorer version 5.5 and 6 that followed and it was great as a standard browser. With XP for example they offered the ability to watch DVD's, in the past you would have to purchase some software just to watch DVD movies. In the End we have to face it, it is their operation System; they should be able to do what they want with it, people should be concentrating in Improving and competing instead of whining when their product is already a failure.

Other companies should take example of Intel and AMD, years ago everyone also thought the Intel was the evil Monopoly Empire, AMD and other companies also whinged, but look today, Intel is no longer the main Stream. What happened in this example was the AMD competed and also produced a superior product going against Intel's chain.

I think that it should all end now and everyone should just move on and concentrate on the real problems facing the country, instead of Bitching on small issues. Remember that Microsoft is pumping Money into the American Economy, which currently almost faced a recession.

I just hop at the end of the day everyone could just move on instead of whinging.
